

Networking For Future Helps District of Columbia Housing Authority Improve Customer Care And Services With Unified Communications Technology

WASHINGTON, June 30, 2018 – Networking For Future, Inc. today announced that District of Columbia Housing Authority (DCHA) is working with Networking For Future (NFF) to replace their aging communications system at their headquarters and multiple tenant housing locations. The NFF solution leverages the latest Cisco unified communication (UC) technology for an easy to use, cost-effective, and secure voice and video platform.

DCHA selected a Cisco next generation collaboration system, including IP-telephony, integrated Webex Boards, and Webex Teams software. The NFF solution integrates the most widely used features from desk and soft phones, desktop video, and Webex conference room video with screen and application sharing.

"We share the DCHA commitment to understanding and pleasing their customers," said Majid Saadat, president for Networking For Future. "With their next generation UC system, DCHA can increase customer satisfaction through secure and reliable voice and video services."
